Payoff at maturity

This chart shows the redemption amount at maturity (payoff) depending on the final level of the underlying (reference value). The green circle shows the intrinsic value, which is the amount investors would receive if, at maturity, the reference value is unchanged from its current level.

Underlying performance

This graph shows the price history for the underlyings, normalized by their current spot prices (end point). The X-axis shows the dates and the Y-axis displays the percentage values for each underlying, relative to their spot prices. The graph aims to help you determine whether the protection is suitable, given the underlyings' historical movements.
